UK Website Page Rewrite Sample Pack

Free · 6 before → after page rewrites for small UK businesses · TCH Works

Most small business websites lose people in the first few lines. They talk about the business instead of the customer, hide the price and the area, and never say what to do next. This pack shows six real-world-style fixes, plus a 10-minute check you can run on your own homepage today.

Every business in this pack is made up so you can see the method without anyone's private details. Phone numbers are placeholders. On a paid job we only use facts you give us or that are already on your site: no invented reviews, awards, prices or promises.

The four-line rule we use on every first screen

Who and where. Say what you do and the area in the headline, in the customer's words.

Why you. One or two concrete reasons, such as same cleaner every time or no waiting rooms.

The price signal. A 'from' price or how pricing works. Hiding it costs enquiries.

One next step. A single clear action, and what happens after they take it.

What's inside

Pages 2–3: six before → after rewrites (four first screens, an About page, a Services section and a Contact page), each with a Google page title and description checked for length.

Page 4: the 10-minute homepage check, a printable tick list.

Page 5: the six questions we ask every client, with space to write your answers, and how to book.

4. Piano teacher, Harlow · About page, opening

BEFORE

About Me. I studied music at university and have been teaching piano since 2009. I am DBS checked. I teach all ages and abilities. I believe music should be fun.

A list of facts about the teacher. Parents are asking 'will my child enjoy it and stick at it?'

AFTER

Patient piano lessons for beginners of any age.

Most of my pupils start knowing nothing, and that's fine. In the first lesson we play a simple tune with both hands, so the first week ends with something to show off at home. I've taught since 2009, hold a current DBS check, and can prepare pupils for graded exams if they want them, though nobody has to.

Button / next step: Book a 30-minute trial lesson for £15 and see how it feels before signing up.

The 10-minute homepage check

Open your site on your phone, not your laptop. Tick each one that's true.

- ☐ Within 5 seconds a stranger can say what you do and where.
- ☐ The headline is about the customer's problem or result, not 'Welcome to…'.
- ☐ There's a price, a 'from' price or a plain line on how pricing works.
- ☐ One main button, and its wording says what happens (e.g. 'Get this week's free times').
- ☐ Your phone number or booking link can be tapped without scrolling far.
- ☐ Every 'we pride ourselves', 'passionate' and 'wide range' is gone or proved with a fact.
- ☐ Paragraphs are three lines or fewer on a phone screen.
- ☐ The area you cover is written as town names people actually search.
- ☐ Each page has its own title under about 60 characters, with the service and town in it.
- ☐ Each page has a Google description under about 155 characters that gives a reason to click.
- ☐ Nothing on the page is out of date: prices, opening hours, Christmas dates, staff.
- ☐ Someone who isn't you has read it aloud without stumbling.

Scoring: 10–12 ticks, your page is working. 6–9, fix the first three gaps this week. Under 6, the page is probably costing you enquiries, and a rewrite will usually pay for itself quickly.

Free tools: your phone's screen, a friend, and Google Search Console (free) to see which searches already show your site.

Your six-question brief

Answer these and you have most of what a good page needs, whether you write it yourself or hire us.

1. Who are your best customers? (age, situation, where they live)

2. What do they get from you that they can't easily get elsewhere?

3. What do you charge, or how does pricing work?

4. Which towns or postcodes do you cover?

5. How should people contact or book you, and how fast do you reply?

6. Anything to avoid? (words you hate, claims you can't make, competitors)
